HOWES A-117. The travels of a British army officer in the Americas in 1831. "The author, a captain in the Forty-second Highlanders, passed through the South en route to the East and Canada after touring British South America and the West Indies. He landed at New Orleans and traveled up the Mississippi to Memphis, thence overland in a four-horse wagon to Nashville, and by stage to Louisville and Cincinnati. Alexander was too much a soldier and too well-seasoned a traveler to be greatly disturbed by the primitive conditions he found in the South, particularly in Tennessee and Kentucky; and on the whole he was not unfriendly, although he disliked slavery and the republican form of government. He was amused by the hasty eating at a Nashville inn and by the equalitarianism which placed him at the same table with a tailor who had just previously pressed his coat." --Clark III, 3. While Alexander disapproved of slavery, he opposed immediate emancipation and was critical of abolitionists.
4. AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY. The American Anti-Slavery Almanac, for 1838. N. Southard, Editor. Boston: Hitchcock, [1837]. 1st ed. 12mo, 48pp, stitched, original printed and illustrated self-wrappers. Untrimmed [loosening], tanned with scattered spotting. Good+. $350.00

EVANS 1004. WROTH MARYLAND 254. SABIN 2684. NAIP w007025. The first edition of this monumental production of the colonial press. Bacon, the compiler of this massive volume, was rector of All-Saints Parish in Frederick County, and domestic chaplain in Maryland to the Right Honorable Frederick Lord Baltimore. Bacon worked on the LAWS for thirteen years and publication took an additional four years to complete. It is considered to be the most important legal work published in the colony, covering the years 1637 through 1763 and supplemented by extensive indices. The work is also noted for its typography, the quality of the printing, and the first appearance of the seal of Maryland on the titlepage. In A HISTORY OF PRINTING IN COLONIAL MARYLAND, 1686-1776, Lawrence C. Wroth describes the work as "not only the most important of the legal publications of the Province of Maryland, but it happens also to have been a specimen of typography which was not exceeded in dignity and beauty by any production of an American colonial press....In scholarly and systematic arrangement as well as in accuracy and completeness it excelled any of the former bodies of law which the Province had possessed....As an easy and dependable guide to the store-house of Maryland history it remains still without rival."

A very good copy of a significant product of the British colonial press.

16. [BADIN, Stephen Theodore]. Origine et Progrès de la Mission du Kentucky, (Etats-Unis d'Amérique); Par un Témoin Oculaire. Paris: Adrien Le Clere, 1821. 1st ed. 8vo, 32pp. 20th century brown half morocco and marbled boards. Nearly fine. $1250.00

Howes B28. Streeter III, 1654. Sabin 2710. Badin was among the earliest wave of missionaries seeking to spread Catholicism west of the Alleghenies. After nearly 30 years of work along the frontier, Badin managed to acquire the land on which Notre Dame University is presently situated. He is buried there.

"In 1793, Stephen Theodore Badin, a native of Orleans, became the first priest ordained in the United States by the Catholic Church. A short while later he was appointed a missionary to Kentucky, with the center of work at Bardstown. Inexperienced and ignorant of frontier language and customs, Badin devoted all his efforts to the great challenge at hand. Although he was usually poor and often suffered for want of bare necessities, he became a church builder, loved and admired by Protestants and Catholics alike.

"In 1819 Badin returned to his native land determined to raise money for his missionary projects. This small book, by an able priest, graphically describes the work of early Catholic missionaries in central Kentucky between 1793 and 1819." --Clark II, 135.

23. [BALDWIN, Thomas]. Narrative of the Massacre, by the Savages, of the Wife and Children of Thomas Baldwin, Who, Since the Melancholy Period of the Destruction of His Unfortunate Family, Has Dwelt Entirely Alone, in a Hut of His Own Construction, Secluded from Human Society in the Extreme Western Part of Kentucky. New York: Martin and Wood, 1835. 1st ed. 8vo; (2), 3-24pp. 19th century plain gray wraps. Foot of folding plate trimmed, some minor foxing and toning, else a very good copy in custom cloth slipcase with red morocco spine label and inner cloth chemise. $1250.00
HOWES B-63, "aa." Rare. Complete with the large folding woodcut frontispiece which is usually lacking or tattered. "Perhaps based on some actual accident of border horror in early Kentucky, but unconvincingly and rhapsodically presented." -Howes B63. "A very florid and romantic narrative." -Jillson p.96. American Imprints 30184 locates 5 copies, only one of which is in Kentucky. With the bookplate of noted Americana collector Josiah Kirby Lilly.
24. BARBE-MARBOIS, Francois. Histoire De La Louisiane et De La Cession De Cette Colonie Par La France aux Etats-Unis De L'Amérique Septentrionale.... Paris. 1829. [6],485pp. plus partially colored folding map. Half title. Contemporary half calf and marbled boards, spine gilt, marbled endpapers and edges. Bookplate on front pastedown, note pinned to half title (nearly detached), minor scattered foxing. Good. $850.00
"Barbé-Marbois represented France in the preliminary negotiations with the United States on the Louisiana purchase and his book is one of the main sources on that subject. It shows that in the claim by the United States in the negotiations with Great Britain, that the northern boundary of Louisiana included the area now comprised in Oregon, Washington and Idaho was without foundation. The important map in the first edition indicated the 110th meridian as the western extent of Louisiana" - Streeter. HOWES B115, "aa." STREETER SALE 1599. SABIN 3306.
25. BARBOUR, George M. Florida for Tourists, Invalids, and Settlers: Containing Practical Information Regarding Climate, Soil, and Productions; Cities, Towns, and People; The Culture of the Orange and Other Tropical Fruits; Farming and Governing; Scenery and Resorts; Sport; Routes of Travel, etc., etc. New York: D. Appleton and Company, 1882. 1st ed. 310pp. Frontis., illus., folding map. Orig. cloth. Very good or better. "Reports of the author's own travels, with a collection of earlier reports, by a former correspondent of the Chicago Times, who had accompanied General Grant on a tour through the State in January, 1880"-Servies, 7104. $225.00
26. BARTRAM, John and KALM, Peter. Observations on the Inhabitants, Climate, Soil, Rivers, Productions, Animals, and Other Matters Worthy of Notice. Made by Mr. John Bartram, in His Travels from Pensilvania, to Onandago, Oswego and Lake Ontario, in Canada. To Which is Annex'd, A Curious Account of the Cataracts at Niagara. By Mr. Peter Kalm, A Swedish Gentleman Who Travelled There. London: Printed for J. Whiston and B. White, 1751. 94pp. plus folding plan of Fort Oswego. Later 3/4 morocco and marbled boards, boards and spine gilt, T.e.g., housed in custom red morocco-backed cloth slipcase with cloth chemise. Internally very clean. A very good copy. $10,000.00

HOWES B-222, "b." Church 977. Field 92. Lande S148. Reese, Struggle for North America 12. Streeter Sale 869. Siebert Sale 152. Wroth, an American Bookshelf 1755, pp.101-105,149-51. Larson 321. TPL 186. Meisel III, p.345. Sabin 3868. The journal of the eminent American naturalist, John Bartram, kept during his trip from July 3 to Aug. 19, 1743, through Pennsylvania and into the Indian country of New York as far as Oswego and Lake George, in the company of cartographer Lewis Evans and interpreter Conrad Weiser, to hold a conference with the Iroquois Indians. The journal contains descriptions of the country and detailed observations of Native American life. There is also a plan of an Iroquois long house on the folding plan of Fort Oswego. Besides this journal, the text includes a letter from Bartram to the Swedish naturalist and traveller, Peter Kalm, describing Niagara. Bartram's international fame rested on his extensive correspondence with leading European scientists, and it was through his contact with the British naturalist, Peter Collinson, that this journal came to be published, sent to press by Collinson without Bartram's knowledge. Bartram was surprised and somewhat annoyed with his British friend when he was sent a copy of the book, since he had wanted to expand on his original diary before publication. A rare and important work.

27. BARTRAM, William. Travels through North & South Carolina, Georgia, East & West Florida, the Cherokee Country, the Extensive Territories of the Muscogulges, or Creek Confederacy, and the Country of the Chactaws.... Phila.: James & Johnson, 1791. [2],xxxiv,[2],522pp. Engraved frontis. portrait of "Mico Chulcco the Long Warrior" by J. Trenchard after Bartram, engraved folding map, and seven engraved plates of natural history specimens (one folding). Contemporary tree calf, spine ruled in gilt and with gilt morocco label, housed in a morocco-backed slipcase and cloth chemise, spine gilt. Binding rubbed, joints worn, front joint cracked (but holding), chipped at head of spine. Frontis. creased. One plate with a two-inch long vertical closed tear and with a small chip in the upper margin, above the neat line; folding plate torn in upper margin, not affecting the illustration. Several instances of early ink marginalia, almost certainly in the hand of Lawrence Washington (see below). Text tanned, with occasional staining and foxing. A good copy. $15,000.00 HOWES B-223, "b." Clark I:197. Evans 23159. Sabin 3870. VAIL 849. Coats, The Plant Hunters, Pp.273-76. Taxonomic Literature 329. Streeter Sale 1088. Field 94. Pilling, Proof-Sheets 301. Servies 669. Reese, Federal Hundred 33. The rare first edition of one of the classic accounts of southern natural history and exploration, with much material on the southern Indian tribes. This copy bears the ownership signature on the front free endpaper of Lawrence A. Washington (dated 1818), the nephew of George Washington. Lawrence Augustine Washington, (1775-1824), was the fourth son of George Washington's younger brother, Samuel. When Samuel Washington died in 1781, the future president took it upon himself to provide for the education of his nephew, Lawrence, and for Lawrence's older brother, George Steptoe Washington. Throughout the 1780s and early 1790s, Washington supervised and paid for their education in Alexandria, Virginia, and then at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia, from which the two nephews graduated in 1792. While in Philadelphia, Lawrence Washington also studied law with Attorney General Edmund Randolph. He married Mary Dorcas Wood in 1797 and lived at Federal Hill, outside Winchester, Virginia. At George Washington's death Lawrence and his brother, George, were absolved of all debts for their schooling, a sum of approximately five thousand dollars. George Washington also left his nephews a small portion of his estate in his will.

For the period, Bartram's work is unrivalled. He travelled several thousand miles through the Southeast in the years just prior to the American Revolution. "...Bartram wrote with all the enthusiasm and interest with which the fervent old Spanish friars and missionaries narrated the wonders of the new found world...he neglected nothing which would add to the common stock of human knowledge" - Field. "Unequaled for the vivid picturesqueness of its descriptions of nature, scenery, and productions" - Sabin. "The classic of southern natural history and exploration, with much on the southern Indian tribes. Bartram's account of the remote frontier, of the plantations, trading posts, and Indian villages at the end of the eighteenth century is unrivaled" - Streeter. Includes a chapter concerning the customs and language of the Muscogulges and Cherokees.

28. BARTRAM, William. Travels through North and South Carolina, Georgia, East and West Florida, the Cherokee Country, the Extensive Territories of the Muscolgulges or Creek Confederacy, and the Country of the Chactaws. London: J. Johnson, 1792. 1st English ed. 8vo. xxiv,520,[12]pp.

Folding map, plus all seven plates (including one folding plate) as issued, (5 of plants and 2 of turtles). A very good copy in full contemporary calf, with leather spine label. Housed in a custom morocco-backed cloth folding box. $7500.00

HOWES B-223, "b": "A work of high character well meriting its high esteem." De Renne I:250. Reese, Federal Hundred 33. Sabin 3870. An important work on Southern exploration and natural history, with much on the Cherokee and Creek Indians. Bartram's travels cover the period from April, 1773, to January, 1778. He operated from Savannah and Charleston, making numerous trips throughout the region. Among his stops were Augusta, Georgia, where he attended a congress of white traders with Creeks and Cherokees, Whatoga in East Tennessee, site of a Cherokee festival, Pensacola, Baton Rouge, and Mobile. An eye ailment caused him to cut short his Southern tour and return to Philadelphia. The frontispiece is by the author.

"Since Bartram was a naturalist, his account of his travels includes details of the flora and fauna and other natural phenomena. His descriptions and comparative data are of scientific value. His account is essentially factual, with occasional reflections on the wonders of nature and the manifestations of the Supreme Being through nature. Bartram was keenly interested in Indian life and customs. He was a careful observer, and in his written record he always distinguished between what he actually saw and what he was told by others. Since most of his journeys were through the wilderness, there is a minimum of material on the white settlers, who, in any case, were only of casual interest to him."-Clark I, 197. "The classic of southern natural history and exploration, with much on the southern Indian tribes. Bartram's account of the remote frontier, of the plantations, trading posts, and Indian villages at the end of the eighteenth century is unrivaled."- Streeeter II, 1088. "Although more especially a naturalist, [Bartram] neglected nothing which would add to the common stock of human knowledge. He not only offers us pictures of Indian life, and sketches of the striking peculiarities of the tribes he visited, but he gives us tables of the names and localities of the numerous towns of the populous nations of the Creeks and Cherokees. Fifty-three villages of the first, and forty-five of the latter are enumerated and named."-Field 94.

HOWES B-255. Haynes 1251. Monaghan, French Travellers in the U.S., 151, France Views America, 203. Scarce in this condition. "[Bayard's] purposes in traveling to Bath were to save his wife and child the perils of a summer in Baltimore, and to observe Americans in village and country rather than in towns in constant intercourse with Europe.

"He traveled through Elliott's Mill, Fredericktown, Middletown, and Hagerstown, and his long residence at Bath, Berkeley County, Virginia (now West Virginia), was punctuated by an excursion to Winchester and its environs, thirty-nine miles distant.

"Bayard's account affords a sympathetic, sentimental, leisurely picture of society at a forgotten watering place seldom visited by travelers. His social and intellectual acceptability and the length of his stay set his book apart from the customary tourist-guide gazetteer. His stated intention of delineating manners and customs is fulfilled. There are observations on diet, women, the rearing of children, religion, and funerals, to make an incomplete list." --Clark II, 77.

34. BENEZET, Anthony. Some Historical Account of Guinea, Its Situation, Produce, and the General Disposition of Its Inhabitants. With an Inquiry into the Rise and Progress of the Slave-Trade.... [Bound with]: SHARP, Granville. Extract from a Representation of the Injustice and Dangerous Tendency of Tolerating Slavery.... Phila.: Joseph Crukshank, 1771. 1st ed. [6], iv, 144; 53, [6]pp. Contemporary calf professionally rebacked in period-style calf with raised spine bands. A very good copy. $2750.00

*Evans 11986. First edition of the Benezet and first American edition of the Sharp. An important early American publication against the slave trade. Benezet (1713-1784) became a Quaker convert and moved to Philadelphia in 1731. He is described in the Library Company Afro-Americana catalogue (Item 44) as "the colonial anchor-man of the Anglo-American anti-slavery axis." Benezet worked ceaselessly to have slavery abolished by the colonial legislatures, and corresponded with Granville Sharp, one of the most important English abolitionists. When Pennsylvania passed an abolition law in 1780 that granted freedom to children of slaves upon reaching the age of twenty-eight (until then they would enjoy the same rights as indentured servants and apprentices), other states did not immediately follow. Benezet told Benjamin Franklin he found it "sorrowfully astonishing that after the declaration so strongly and clearly made of the value & right of liberty on this continent, no state but that of Pennsylvania & that imperfectly, have yet taken a step towards the total abolition of slavery." On his return to Philadelphia in 1785, Franklin became president of the Pennsylvania Society for Promoting the Abolition of Slavery. Among the works the society distributed were those of the London abolitionist Thomas Clarkson. Benezet had influenced Clarkson's anti-slavery views. In The History of the Abolition of the Slave Trade, Clarkson states: "Benezet's account of Guinea became instrumental beyond any other book ever before published, in disseminating a proper knowledge of the slave trade." A very scarce title, containing two titlepages.*

Beverley covers all aspects of life in Virginia, including produce both natural and cultivated, early plantations, and history up to the time of writing. Beverley was a clerk of the council of Virginia about 1697, when Andros was governor. "After John Smith, the first account of this colony, the first one penned by a native and the best contemporary account of its aboriginal tribes and the life of its early settlers" - Howes. "A valuable firsthand account of conditions, written by a self-consciously American observer of nature, the Indians, political and social life" - Vail. The finely executed plates are based on the engravings found in the first part of Theodor De Bry's GRAND VOYAGES, a volume devoted to Harriot's late sixteenth-century work regarding Virginia. The images are based on the original drawings produced by John White.*

Blockson 9518 (ref). Sabin 5800 (ref). Noticing a severe lack of historical writing on slavery, the author took it upon himself to provide at the very least a collection of documents and brief historical background of the topic. From his preface, Blake is clearly anti-slavery ("Slavery is inconsistent with the moral nature of man"), but attempts to present both sides of the ongoing argument. He gives a detailed account of the history of slavery from ancient times, but devotes about half of this long volume to the slavery question in 19th century America, including discussions about and reprinted texts from the Dred Scott decision, the Compromise of 1850, and more. The historical discussion is illustrated by a number of engraved plates depicting a variety of historical plantation and slave trafficking scenes. This work appears to have been published several times between 1857 and 1861, though Sabin lists only 1858 and 1861 editions; this is the earliest edition, not in Sabin.

A rare document. OCLC locates four copies, at the Filson Historical Society, Library of Virginia, University of Virginia, and the Bibliotheque Nationale de France. A combination broadside prospectus and stock certificate for 100 acres of land, part of a 1,849,000-acre property in Virginia and Kentucky owned by the Compagnie de Colonisation Américaine, founded by Jean Sigismund Ehrenreich, Comte de Redern. The company's American agent, John Swan, was an adventurer long active in Franco-American commercial affairs. The text describes the division of land sales between individual colonists and speculators, the different classes of shares, financial organizations, commercial potential, future improvements, etc. This is one of 12,000 shares constituting Series B, numbered 9563 and dated July 1, 1820.

The Comte de Redern (1761-1841) was a Prussian diplomat, intellectual, eccentric, and entrepreneur. During the time he was serving as Prussian Minister at the Court of London in the early 1790s, Redern developed a friendship with Henri Saint-Simon, with whom he shared utopian visions and a progressive humanist philosophy. The two developed a financial partnership and jointly purchased French national lands during the 1790s, an enterprise imbued with idealism but which dissolved into personal conflict that dragged on for decades. During the early 1800s, Redern invested heavily in both industry and land. In 1820, the time this certificate was issued, "his vast enterprises crashed around him. To escape his creditors, he fled to Brussels, and from there to Holland, where he was imprisoned. He took to practicing hypnotism, underwent a religious conversion...after many years he was allowed to return to France, where he resumed his philosophical studies" (Frank E. Manuel, The New World of Henri Saint-Simon, Cambridge, MA, 1956, p.107). Redern wrote several books, including works on politics, psychology, and the nature of man. In earlier issues of this broadside, Redern is listed as the proprietor of the Company. In this later issue, the proprietor is identified as Louis Philibert Brun D'Aubignosc, a French imperial administrator.

Lacks the map. $2500.00 HOWES C826, "b". CHURCH 886. EUROPEAN AMERICANA 727/46. CLARK 1:68. SABIN 17280. The third issue of this important work, first published in 1722, differing from the first issue only by the substitution of a new titlepage to make the tract appear more current to a contemporary audience. One of the first works in English to extensively describe the Southeast. Coxe, who claimed grants of much of the South, sought to arouse British concern over the area's occupation by the French. Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, and Louisiana are described. The large folding map is often lacking from copies of the book, including the copy at hand. The elder Daniel Coxe was physician to Charles II and Queen Anne; his son inherited his claims to grants in the South and produced this book. The text, based on memoirs of trappers and explorers, contains much information published for the first time and is credited with containing the first published proposal of a political confederation of the North American colonies.

101. COXE, Daniel. A Description of the English Province of Carolana. By the Spaniards call'd Florida, and by the French, La Louisiane ... With a large and curious Preface, demonstrating the Right of the English to that Country, and the unjust Manner of the French usurping of it. London: for Edward Symon, 1727. 8vo. [54], 122pp. Folding copper-engraved "Map of Carolana and of the River Meschacebe" [i.e. Mississippi] (map linen-backed at an early date). Later smooth tan calf by W. Pratt, covers with a gilt double filet border, spine with raised bands in six compartments, red morocco lettering pieces in the second and third compartments, the others with a repeat decoration in gilt, marbled endpapers, gilt edge. The first edition, third issue of this rare and highly important work, with the map which includes the first English depiction of the Mississippi Valley.

$11,000.00

With the exception of the title, this third issue is identical to the first published in 1722. According to William S. Coker, in his introduction to the 1976 University of Florida facsimile of the first edition, the three subsequent "editions" were in fact re-issues of the unsold sheets of the first edition with new updated title pages inserted.

This is one of the first English works to describe the Southeast in any detail. Colonel Coxe laid claim to an enormous amount of land in the South thanks to grants made to his father Dr. Daniel Coxe by King Charles II. Coxe published the present work to further his families claims, but also to raise awareness of the huge potential of the area and the dangers posed by French incursions. He did not limit himself to the Carolinas, discussing the lower Mississippi in detail as well. Florida, Georgia and Louisiana are also described. Much of the information, gathered from British hunters and explorers, is published here for the first time. The work is also credited with being the first published proposal of a political confederation of the North American colonies.

The map, which is often missing, is a particularly fine copy: it is of real importance. Drawn up by the Coxe family to illustrate their claims, it is also the first English depiction of the Mississippi valley. It also improved on all previous maps by eliminating the mountain ranges that were often shown as running beside the Mississippi River, as well as correctly fixing the location of the Appalachian and Ozark Mountains. It extends as far north as the Great Lakes and includes an inset of the Mississippi Delta at the lower right "A Map of the Mouth of the River Meschacebe". Church 886; Clark I:68; cf. Siebert Sale 605 (this copy). Streeter Sale 1137. HOWES D-492, "aa." Sabin 20815. Clark II:88. Reese, Federal Hundred 90. The superb Siebert copy of Drayton's great work on South Carolina, one of only 500 copies printed. Drayton became governor of South Carolina in January 1800 and served until December 1802. This book was composed and written during that period, when he travelled extensively throughout the state, including the more remote reaches of the upper country. His wide-ranging interests and position led him to accumulate materials on practically every aspect of life in South Carolina at the time, including natural history; Indians; minerals; raising rice, tobacco, and corn; inland navigation; commerce and manufactures; and various social and charitable activities. Drayton's work is well illustrated, with a large map of South Carolina, one of the Santee Canal, and plates showing the State House, rice cultivation, and fossils discovered in the up-country.
After the book was completed, Drayton obtained a map of Winyaw Bay, and had a postscript and the map printed and tipped into some copies. This copy contains this rare insert, both the postscript and map, frequently lacking; copies often do not have a complete complement of plates and maps, and even the Streeter copy lacked the map of South Carolina. An unmatched superb copy in absolutely original condition.

One of thirty copies of this dark and dramatic lithographic print depicting the lynching of Matthew Williams in Salisbury, Maryland in 1931. Williams worked as a laborer for a wealthy factory owner, Daniel J. Elliott, in town and was charged with murdering his boss over a wage dispute, although some uncorroborated accounts claim it was Elliott's son who committed the crime and pinned it on Williams. Williams himself had been shot in the altercation and was taken to the hospital, where a mob of over two thousand broke through the doors and forcefully dragged him to the courthouse where he was hanged. His body was then carried into town, doused in gasoline, and burned. The print depicts Williams hanging from a tree with his hospital bandages still around his head. His body is twisted in pain, and in the background a group of small figures stands next to a bonfire raising guns or other objects above their heads.

The artist of this piece, Edmund Duffy, was a multiple Pulitzer-prize winning cartoonist who often targeted racist groups and hate crimes with his work. A colleague of Duffy's once noted that he had "an immense capacity for hatred, but his hatred [did] not rise to incandescence except when turned on injustice" (Harrison, p. 28). The artist worked for the BALTIMORE SUN and H.L. Mencken between 1925 and 1948 (where his first printed cartoon admonished President Coolidge for his limp response to Klan activities) and is perhaps best known for his editorial cartoons surrounding the Scopes Monkey Trial. The BALTIMORE SUN covered the story of Williams' lynching extensively. Duffy's decision to use the title of Maryland's state song for the title of his depiction of this vicious hate crime as a further indictment of his fellow Marylanders, along with angry comments from Mencken, led to riots and public protests - not against the crime, but against the paper. This copy of MARYLAND, MY MARYLAND is inscribed by Duffy to the novelist Joseph Hergesheimer and dated 1932. Hergesheimer was also a friend of Mencken's whose ornate and elaborate prose garnered both great praise and scorn in the 1920s and 30s.

*No copies of this print are listed in OCLC, though we are able to find copies at the National Museum of African American History and Culture and the H.L. Mencken Collection at the Enoch Pratt Free Library in Baltimore. A bold and striking indictment of the mob violence that was taking place in America well into the 20th century, printed in only a handful of copies. Rare and important. S.L. HOWES E-94, "aa." Graff 1230 (1803 ed.). Sabin 22217. Second issue composed of the sheets of the 1803 edition with a tipped in title page dated 1814. Ellicott's was the first thorough American survey of West Florida, the lower Mississippi and Gulf regions. His report influenced the eventual U.S. acquisition of the area. Andrew Ellicott came from a talented Quaker family with mills in Pennsylvania and Maryland. "No Quaker himself, he served in the Revolution. He was best known as a surveyor, having had a hand in the boundaries of New York, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Georgia, and South Carolina; and he surveyed the District of Columbia. Pursuant to the treaty of San Lorenzo el Real, 1795, he was appointed by George Washington as United States commissioner for drawing the boundary between the United States and the Spanish Floridas.

"Ellicott's Journal is the product of this commission. The narrative part of it is no journal at all, but a carefully composed work written in 1802.... The appendix is a record of meteorological, astronomical, and chronometrical observations from the mouth of the Ohio (late 1796) down the Mississippi, and along the boundary and Gulf Coast to the mouth of St. Mary's (early 1800). It also lists and describes the instruments used in running the line...Ellicott's remarks on the places he visited... are useful as are the temperatures and other scientific data; incidental description... botanical lists; descriptions of the Florida Keys; practical advice on navigating the Mississippi; and remarks on the soil of the Mississippi Territory and the Floridas....[T]he most valuable and interesting portion of this book is that which deals with Ellicott's residence at Natchez, February, 1797, to April, 1798, during the period when the Spanish were delaying the execution of the treaty, and the year in which the transition from Spanish to American rule was effected.... Ellicott threw off his disguise of surveyor, and probably had more fun and a larger sense of importance than he ever had in his life as an agent of manifest destiny, a politician, and promoter of rebellion and factionalism.... He helped shape the first American government in the territory, and served as somewhat more than a catalytic agent in the formation of political parties in the Mississippi Territory." --Clark II, 89.

HOWES F-68, "aa." Featherstonhaugh, a geologist and geographer, wrote several accounts of his travels. He was quite critical of slavery: "The poor slaves I saw here did not appear to me to stand any higher in the scale of animal existence than the horse: the horse does his daily task, eats his changeless provender, and at night is driven to his stable to be shut in, until he is again drawn forth at the earliest dawn to go through the same unpitied routine until he dies. This is the history of the slave in Texas, differing in nothing from that of the horse, except that instead of maize and straw he is supplied with a little salt pork to his maize, day after day, without any change, until death relieves him from his weariness" (Vol. 2, p. 189).

"Featherstonhaugh left Baltimore on August 1, 1834, and traveled by rail to Frederick and thence by stage through Harper's Ferry, Winchester and Staunton, to the Virginia Springs...He proceeded westward with his son, through Fincastle, Wytheville, Abingdon, and Saltville, to Blountville Tennessee. On this trip he overtook a slave trader, now known to have been John Armfield, with three hundred slaves bound for Natchez, a circumstance which led to his inclusion of a vigorously critical reaction to slavery and the slave trade. Continuing in Tennessee, he passed through Kingsport, Rogersville, Knoxville. to Nashville. He was well pleased with Nashville where he remained for some days... He proceeded by way of Bowling Green, Mammoth Cave, and Elizabethtown to Louisville. Next he proceeded to St. Louis and Little Rock; then went a short way into Texas and back to Little Rock where he embarked by steamboat to New Orleans. "His references to Arkansas are critical in the extreme, including descriptions of violence and uncouth life at Little Rock; bad food and a habit of never closing doors; and a call at the executive mansion, where he was informed by the Governor's wife that the chief executive had gone into the woods to look for a sow and pigs. Featherstonhaugh was one of the few important travelers of this period whose accounts were confined almost entirely to the South.... He was opposed to American

This edition follows the notoriously rare first American edition, published in Wilmington, DE, in 1784, and preceding the first English edition of 1793. This book is a cornerstone of frontier literature and is illustrated with a large folding map of Kentucky. The map, measuring 15 1/2 by 14", was executed specifically for the French edition and differs significantly from the maps in the American edition and in the later English edition. Further, the map in the American edition was not usually issued with the book; this, then, is the first edition of this work with a generally available map.

The book's importance "lies in its being the first history of Kentucky. It contains the first map of Kentucky and probably the first account of Daniel Boone. The author first described Kentucky, and then incorporated the Boone narrative, which was certainly not written by Boone. 'The Minutes of the Pianashaw Council, held at Post St. Vincent, April 15, 1784' was followed by brief descriptions of Indian tribes, and tables giving the distances from Philadelphia to the Falls of the Ohio by way of Boone's Trace and from Philadelphia to New Orleans by way of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers.

"Filson came to Kentucky in 1782 or 1783 from Pennsylvania. He was a surveyor and consequently saw much of the country, or his map could not have been produced." --Clark II, 23.

Grégoire's book was an important and authoritative contribution to Afro-American historicity"-Blockson. Classic examination and defense of the intellectual capacity of Blacks. Grégoire and other abolitionists on both sides of the Atlantic sought to establish the "capacity" of the Negro. Not every one would rise to the level of a Phillis Wheatley, Ignacio Sancho, or Olaudah Equiano, but the "capacity" was there. Grégoire in France and Theodore Dwight in America tried to prove that Black Africa not only had the capacity but a written language, which of course was Arabic.*

First edition of Haywood's substantial account of the natural and aboriginal history of Tennessee. A judge in Davidson County and one of the pioneering historians of Tennessee, Haywood wrote the companion volume entitled The Civil and Political History of the State of Tennessee, from Its Earliest Settlement up to the Year 1796, also published in 1823. In addition to providing much information about the Indians of Tennessee, the author attempts to demonstrate the relationship of Native Americans to the Caucasian race. He also includes details regarding Mexicans, Hindus, Persians, Peruvians, Cherokees, Chickasaws, and Natchez Indians. "In this book, now exceedingly rare and highly prized, the author has brought together a very large number of curious facts, relating to the origin and character of the natives of his State, prior to the settlement by the whites. He does not favor the hypothesis of great antiquity in the Indian nations of America, and believes in their common origin with the Caucasian race. He describes with great minuteness and care the relics of the race which once inhabited the territory, its utensils, skeletons, crania, and fortifications, most of which he appears to have personally inspected" - Field. This is one of the most difficult Tennessee books to acquire, especially in unsophisticated condition.*

The rare thick paper issue of the second American edition of Jefferson's famous work, and the first American edition to contain a map. This is the only book-length work by Jefferson to be published in his lifetime, and has been called "one of America's first permanent literary and intellectual landmarks." It was largely written in 1781 and first published in Paris, in French, in 1785, then published in English in London in 1787. Written in the form of answers to questions about Virginia, the book supplies a description of the geography, with an abundance of supporting material and unusual information. As J.M. Edelstein notes: "Jefferson wrote about things which interested him deeply and about which he knew a great deal; the NOTES, therefore, throws a fascinating light on his tastes, curiosities, and political and social opinions." The map that accompanies this edition was executed by Samuel Lewis and depicts Virginia in considerable detail. The story of the creation of this book and its publishing history is an interesting one. It is told fully by Millicent Sowerby in her catalogue of Jefferson's library, where it occupies some thirty pages in small type. This edition includes appendices containing Charles Thomson's notes on Jefferson's original text, his "Draught of a Fundamental Constitution for the Commonwealth of Virginia" and "An Act for Establishing

One of the most handsome American editions of Jefferson, and the first issued after his accession to the presidency, noted on the title as the "First Hot-Pressed Edition." The portrait, pictured and described in Cunningham's THE IMAGE OF THOMAS JEFFERSON IN THE PUBLIC EYE..., was engraved by William Harrison, Jr., after a print by Mathew Carey. It is one of the relatively few engraved images of Jefferson. This edition adds Jefferson's famous first inaugural address ("we are all Republicans, we are all Federalists"). An appendix adds his correspondence relating to the Logan massacre, a horrific frontier tale of the murder of a friendly Indian family in southwest Virginia during Lord Dunmore's War in 1774.

HOWES J-78. Clark I:262. Sabin 35895. Sowerby IV, pp.301-30. This is the rare French translation of Notes on the State of Virginia, which was first issued privately by Jefferson in 1785 in an edition of 200 copies for his personal friends. Jefferson had not intended the work for general distribution, but permitted this work--translated by the Abbe Morallet--and a London edition in 1787, before the Philadelphia edition of 1788 to prevent any pirating of the work. This is the only book-length work by Jefferson to be published in his lifetime, and has been called "One of America's first permanent literary and intellectual works." Written in the form of answers to questions about Virginia, the book supplies a description of the geography, with an abundance of supporting material and unusual information. As J.M. Edelstein notes: "Jefferson wrote about things which interested him deeply and about which he knew a great deal; the Notes, therefore, throws a fascinating light on his tastes, curiosities, and political and social opinions." Millicent Sowerby, in her catalogue of Jefferson's library, fully tells the story of the creation of this book in thirty pages.

London. 1770. 96pp. Antique-style three-quarter calf and marbled boards. Internally clean. Very good. $12,500.00
First edition of this important account of South Carolina in the mid-18th century. Johnston, a doctor, was the chief medical officer of the British Army in South Carolina. He writes extensively on the diseases of the area, in addition to the climate, weather, and local foods. He specifically discusses several kinds of fevers, as well as cholera, dysentery, and pleurisy, noting a particularly virulent form of that disease which often attacks the slave population. He also includes a chapter on the local Indian tribes - including the Catawbans, Cherokees, Creeks, and Chickasaws - and the role they played in the late French and Indian War. Scarce on the market; no copies have appeared at auction since the Streeter Sale in 1967.
Many sources, including Howes, enter with Milligen as the author's surname. It was, but he later assumed the last name of a relative named Johnston. HOWES M621, "aa." STREETER SALE 1131. SABIN 49086. ESTC T99069.

"Lynch was one of the black Congressmen from Mississippi during Reconstruction. His book is an unabashed effort to justify Reconstruction. There is considerable emphasis on local Mississippi politics and events of the era, as well as national politics with Mississippi involvement. Lynch was not a radical activist by any means; he insisted that black goals were non-intrusive ones. The book includes an interesting account of an interview between Lynch and President Cleveland" Krick 290.

HOWES M-117, "Judicious commentary based on extensive travels." Mackay arrived at Halifax in January 1846 and proceeded through North and South Carolina, by water to Mobile, through the lower South and up the Mississippi to Louisville. He left the continent in early 1847, after having travelled north through Pittsburgh, Niagara Falls, Montreal and New York.

"Mackay was objective and unbiased in his data regarding the South. His analysis of the region takes up about one-third of the two volumes. He warned of the dangers of forming impressions from a few days' observation of its 'floating population' encountered on steamboats, in railway carriages, and in barrooms. 'In the South particularly,' he continued, 'one must get out of the current if he would appreciate society aright.' As an evaluation of the overall picture of the South

Bookplate of former owner, else a near fine copy. $2000.00
Three editions of Michaux's Travels were published in London in 1805. The present edition, translated by B. Lambert and published by J. Mawman, is the scarcest and much preferred of the three. Michaux was commissioned by the French government in 1801 to sell his father's tree plantations in Charleston. His journey lasted from August 1801 until March 1803, during which time he travelled extensively throughout the eastern, central, and southern U.S. Among his stops were Lexington and the horse farms of Kentucky; Nashville and Jonesborough, Tennessee; Morganton, North Carolina; and Chester, Columbia, and finally Charleston, South Carolina. He comments heavily on the flora and fauna of Georgia and the Carolinas, as well as on the health of the cotton and tobacco trades. A highly interesting account of a journey during which the author compiled much information for his later work, The North American Sylva. HOWES M-579. Clark II, 106. Graff 2780.

An anonymous work "Dedicated to Miss Minnie Jenks by The Author [title page inscription] about a young woman off to teach the Asanese but who "reached wild Africa's shore." "Natives of a sunnier strand, Who now her blood and flesh demand. They edge their teeth with iron files And point the nails upon each hand." The illustration shows just this with an elephant and lion in the background. The next page shows the missionary on the ground, while the cannibals wave a foot and leg about and fight over her belongings. This is followed by another illustration showing the chief wearing her bonnet and carrying her parasol, while others wear bits of her clothes. The final illustration is a roomful of weeping relations, who have received the hymnbook, a handkerchief, and a lock of hair. From the clothes and furnishings this work would appear to date from the 1840s. The illustrations are done with great skill as is the cruelly humorous verse (clearly either a relation or close friend of Minnie Jenks).

vignettes on border depicting a bald eagle looking down on a steamboat and sailing ship at top, fruit bowl at bottom.

Mitchell was one of the leading map publishers of the 19th century. He joined with Young to produce precise, geographically balanced maps. In 1832 they published a Travellers Guide through the United States: A Map of the Roads, Distances, Steam boats & Canal Routes &c. This was reissued several times and led them to produce a series of Tourist Pocket Maps beginning in 1834. This pocket map from 1835 includes the sort so information in the Travellers Guide, mileage markers along main roads and waterways, and the indices of steamboat and stage routes.

*Howes M763, "b." Streeter Sale 1155. Field 1085. Clark I:125. De Renne, p.117. Vail 428. Willingham 5. European Americana 744/153. ESTC T131063. Moore arrived in Georgia in February of 1736, having sailed from England with Gov. James Oglethorpe. His account describes his stay in Georgia through June. He was appointed keeper of stores at the new settlement of Frederica, located on Sea Island in the southern part of the present state of Georgia. "His journal makes excellent reading. It begins with the daily happenings on the voyage from England....It then discusses the various Indian tribes, the location of their lands, Oglethorpe's dealings with them, incidents in the life of Tomo-chi-chi, the system of land grants, descriptions of Savannah and Frederica, and an account of the air, soil, rivers, roads, and other matters" - Clark. "A work of genuine merit, acquainting us especially with the condition of Savannah and the adjacent region...and with those preliminary negotiations which resulted in a postponement of impending hostilities between Georgia and Florida" - Winsor. "This chatty journal gives a delightful account...it is in many ways a highly descriptive travelogue and does much to document the natural history of the colony and its coastal expansion to Frederica and Florida" - Willingham. Moore returned to England after this initial sojourn, but was back in Georgia from 1738 until 1743, when he returned to England and published this book. This copy was previously in the library of West Indies planter and politician, Bryan Edwards (1743-1800). Edwards is best known as the author of THE HISTORY, CIVIL AND COMMERCIAL, OF THE BRITISH COLONIES IN THE WEST INDIES, first published in 1793. He was a supporter of slavery and favored regulation (but not abolition) of the slave trade. He was also quite critical of the French treatment of African slaves on Haiti, no doubt fearing the slave rebellion being fomented on French-ruled Haiti might migrate to British-controlled Jamaica. Edwards was elected to the American Philosophical Society in 1774, and as a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1794. John Fleming paid $1000 for the Streeter copy in*
